"A 100 Year Legacy Reborn"
& Historian - David Clark

David Clark began his interest in pocket knives as a boy in the Ozark Mountains of North Arkansas. While a passionate collector of pocket knives over the past 30 years, David also developed a strong desire to learn the history of cutlery manufacturers. Today, he is totally dedicated to this interest.

In the mid 1990's, David became acquainted with Schatt & Morgan after he purchased a few S&M reproduction knives. This in turn, spurred his interest in Queen Cutlery, the manufacturer of these Schatt & Morgan reproductions he owned, and the history of Queen Cutlery and its forerunner Schatt & Morgan Cutlery. Over the years, David has collected hundreds of knives and continues his prospecting into the history of pocket knives today.

He has contributed research and cutlery artifacts for several publications on the history of Schatt & Morgan Cutlery and The Dollar Knife Corporation. David has acquired two historic Schatt & Morgan knife catalogs, one published in 1903 and the other circa 1908. These two catalogs are being republished and are the backbone for the new "Heritage Series" from Queen Cutlery.

Queen Cutlery Today.

The mid-1930s were a difficult time for many American industries including the cutlery industry. Many once famous and thriving cutlery companies met their demise in this era of economic difficulty. One of them, the Schatt and Morgan Cutlery Company of Titusville, Pennsylvania came to an end after nearly four decades of producing some of the finest cutlery known in the history of the industry. Five former employees, E. Clarence Erickson, Jesse F. Barker, Harry L. Mathews, Geza Revitzky, Frank Foresther who had been previously released from Schatt and Morgan, started their own business in 1922. They named their new company "Queen City Cutlery" after their hometown of Titusville, which was quite often referred to as the Queen City. They developed a thriving contract business and were still doing well when their former employer, Schatt and Morgan closed their doors in the 1930s. At a sheriff's auction in 1933, the Queen City Cutlery Company's founders bought all the holdings, land, buildings, and equipment of the bankrupted Schatt and Morgan Company.

In the late 1960s, a time of modernization and diversification, many cutlery businesses were closing their doors or being purchased for corporate diversification. In 1969 the descendants of the five Queen City founders felt their business would survive better being a part of a corporate conglomerate. Queen Cutlery Company was purchased by Servotronics Corporation of Buffalo, New York. Since that time Queen Cutlery has gone back to its roots still using some of the old Schatt and Morgan equipment, tooling and processes and has become the finest manufacturer of high quality antique style pocket knives and hunting knives in the U.S. today.
